

I feel that I shouldn't be restricted to one VRS provider just because the device was "hot-wired" to complement their system only. It is frustrating trying to contact friends via VRS when they use a different device than mine. It is hard for me to give out phone number because my IP tend to change quite often. With an uniform device and one system providing phone numbers to mask IPs, it would make life much easier.

One of the biggest reasons I chose d-link is the option to use different VRS and not promising to use one certain provider for a certain amount of minutes per month or I'd have to return the device. That is blackmailing.

Thanks,
Barbara
